Wellington is a charming market town situated in the valley of the River Tone at the foot of the Blackdown Hills, a designated Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

Wellington is mentioned in the Domesday Book, but it owes much of its development to the weaving trade established in the town by the Fox family in the 18th century – a visit to the town's museum will give an interesting insight into the town's history.

The Wellington Monument, built in honour of the first Duke of Wellington, is 175 ft high and a prominent landmark in the area from which glorious views of the surrounding countryside towards Exmoor can be enjoyed. The 'Iron Duke' is also remembered through the 1930s style Art Deco cinema which bears his name, Wellesley, and is the venue for a wide range of entertainment.

The town boasts a considerable number of independent shops which make it a good destination for some retail therapy, while the delightful park is an oasis of tranquillity. The Wellington Basins on the edge of the town are a wonderful location for wildlife where nature thrives and provide a great opportunity for children's outdoor adventures.

There are some fabulous food suppliers in the area which stem from the rich farming heritage for which the area is well known. Wellington celebrates this with its annual Food Fair, part of the Wellington Food Town initiative. Wellington is well-connected with convenient access to the M5 motorway at Jct 26 with Taunton and Exeter within easy striking distance.
